HONGKONG, FEBRUARY 7TH, 1883.

THE Bill introduced at the last meeting of the Legislative Council to amend the Companies Ordinance recalls the passing of the Companies Ordinance of 1877, in connection with which it may be of interest to state a few facts which have now probably passed from the memory of most people. In the year 1875 the China Traders' Insurance Company, being desirous of subdividing its shares, which were then of the nominal value of $5,000 each, made representations on the subject to the Government, with the result that a Bill to amend the old Ordinance was introduced. This Bill followed the English Act, including the provision that a Company might sub-divide its shares provided the proportion between the amount paid up and unpaid should remain the same. The Bill went on to its second reading and was considered in Committee, when the then Chief Justice, Sir JOHN SMALE, said "Power to reduce the amount "of shares might be productive of great "evil. Speaking as a lawyer and as one "who had paid great attention to companies, "he said that many of the evils connected "with companies in England were due to "the low price of the shares." The HON. P. "RYRIE said "He approved of the Chief "Justice's remarks. Companies, the "shares of which were numerous and "of small value, were undoubtedly a great "evil." The result of the discussion was that the further consideration of the Bill was adjourned sine die. We presume the hon. gentleman has altered his opinion since then. However, for the time being the Bill was shelved, and in order to give the China Traders' Insurance Company the particular facility it required, a Bill was passed giving it power to sub-divide its shares into three. The Bill was not passed, however, without great opposition from the unofficial members of Council, the principle of the opposition being that the alteration sought to be made could be effected by the winding up and re-constitution of the Company, and that special legislation in favour of a particular company was undesirable. The matter was then referred home, and the Secretary of State was of opinion that a general measure should be introduced under which all companies should have the same facilities. The Bill, which had been shelved, was then re-introduced, and was again violently opposed by the Chief Justice, who said, "Suppose this Bill passes, the China Traders' "may reduce their shares to a dollar a piece, "and the insurers of ships will be in the "hands of the lowest of the low among the "Chinese. It will be a gambling spe- "culation altogether, and if insurers are "to trust to such people for their insurance "I wish them joy of their security. . . . . "I have said before, and have always felt, "that the system of giving facilities to po- "pularise joint stock companies is of the "most prejudicial character, and it is only "tending to convert these companies into "gambling speculations. I do object to any "company sub-dividing its shares." His Honour then moved that the Bill be not proceeded with at that time. Mr. RYRIE, in seconding, said—"I quite approve of every- "thing he [the Chief Justice] has said "about companies here, and I still say "there is no call in the Colony for the "Ordinance now before us." The Chief Justice explained that if there were a limitation that the shares when so sub-divided should not be of a less value than $1,500 that would go partly to meet his objection. The Governor, Sir ARTHUR KENNEDY, however, stated that he would withdraw the Bill, as the Chief Justice thought it inexpedient to pass it notwithstanding his knowledge that its adoption had been recommended by the Secretary of State. The whole question was then again referred home, with the objections of the Chief Justice. In reply the Secretary of State wrote a dispatch, directing the Bill to be carried through, and dealing with the objections of the Chief Justice. In the course of that dispatch Lord CARNARVON said—"The Com- "panies Ordinance now in force permits the "formation of companies with shares of one "dollar, and I have examined the list of "companies forwarded by Sir JOHN SMALE, "but I fail to detect any indication that the "community has indulged in small shares "for the purpose of gambling; the lowest "shares on the list are those of a Rice Com- "pany at Taels 20, equal to at least £5 ster- "ling, and the next a Bakery Company with "shares at $50, equal to £10 sterling. Apart "from these the Hongkong shares appear "to be in no instance of less nominal value "than $100, or £20 sterling. In deference, "however, to Sir JOHN SMALE'S long local "experience and to the position which he "occupies, I have to request that you will "also cause to be inserted a proviso at the "end of the first paragraph of the 21st Sec- "tion of the English Act, that the amount in "which each share is so reduced shall in no "case be less than one-fourth of the amount "of the original share." The Chief Justice then bowed to the decision of the Secretary of State, but stated that his opinion remained the same, and that "his antiquated notions "agreed with those of every judge who sat "on the Equity Bench when he was in Eng- "land that joint stock companies had been "the curse of England." The Bill proceeded in due course through its several stages, and was passed on the 21st June, 1877. Few people will be found now-a-days to endorse the opinion of Sir JOHN SMALE as to the pernicious influence of joint stock companies. While it is undoubtedly the fact that such companies do give facilities for gambling, this evil is small when compared with the immense benefits they confer, not only on their shareholders but on the country at large, and the evils they obviate. The facilities for intelligent enterprise afforded by joint stock companies have not been without their effect in the industrial and commercial progress of the last few decades, while no such wide-spread calamity as that brought about by the failure of the City of Glasgow Bank is possible under this system. As to the sub-division of the shares of existing companies, it is desirable in this, as in all other matters of a like kind, to allow every possible freedom of individual action. Artificial restrictions imposed by the state are objectionable, and in the end have almost invariably to give way to the growth of enlightened public opinion, as in the particular instance now before us in this Colony. It is unnecessary that we should here refer to the particular success which has attended joint stock enterprise in Hongkong and the Far East in general. The evidences of that success are patent on every hand, and there can be no question that the same system will be no unimportant factor in the future material progress of the Colony. If the system be good in itself, then, the more widely extended it is the better; and therefore it is desirable that shares should be of such value that they may be within reach of all who by prudent saving or otherwise are possessed of a moderate amount of capital, and not be confined exclusively to the large capitalists.

The following paragraph is taken from the New York Sun:—"Among the shadows that fall from time to time over even the brightest scenes was the announcement of the death in Paris of Mrs. Albert Heard, formerly the beautiful Mary Livingston, who married and went abroad not many years since. She was the daughter of Mr. Harry Livingston, whose wife was Miss Angelica Urquhart, of New Orleans, and was one of the loveliest women this country has ever produced."

The steamer Stamboul, pioneer vessel of the Nouvelle Compagnie Marseillaise de Navigation a Vapeur, Messrs. Fraissinet & Co.'s new line of steamers between Marseilles and Hongkong, arrived here last night viâ ports of call. She is a fine Clyde built vessel well adapted for the trade.

The Japan Mail says:—"Considerable additions to the Osaka Arsenal are in process of construction, and both by the Army and Navy Departments warlike preparations are vigorously pushed forward. These measures are understood to be simply precautionary, their proximate cause being a feeling of uneasiness engendered by China's inexplicable attitude in Korea. If China is so ill-advised as to rush into a groundless quarrel, she will find Japan, not indeed willing, but certainly well prepared."

Yesterday information was received by the Naval authorities to the effect that the turret ironclad ship Wivern, whilst on her way down from Canton, ran aground on a mudbank near the mouth of the Fatshan Creek. She left Canton on Monday night to take advantage of the tide, and the pilot no doubt got out of his reckoning in the dark. No material damage is believed to have been sustained by her, and she was expected to come off the bank last night or to-day. For a long time past the vessel had been lying in reserve with only about half a dozen men in her to take care of her, but lately, in consequence of the sloop Albatross being under repair, the crew of the latter have been temporarily transferred to her.

The Shanghai Mercury of the 1st inst. says:—"A banker at Tunkadoo failed yesterday for a sum reported at Tls. 50,000, but we think for a larger sum. His estate is not expected to turn out well. Losses in silk are supposed to be the cause of his bankruptcy. He committed suicide by swallowing opium and samshoo, which when taken together are looked upon as certain death. The great silk merchant, Chun Cho-ping, who is considered to be an expert in relieving cases of opium poisoning, hurried to the assistance of the moribund banker, but his services were of no avail. This is quite in old China style. It is quite a modern innovation to meet your creditors with a composition. The old plan was to commit suicide if you could not meet your engagements at China New Year, and many suicides used to take place just before the annual day of reckoning."

Preparations are going on rapidly for raising the sunken steamer Caribrooke by the Hongkong and Whampoa Dock Company, who have undertaken the task. She will be floated by six large pontoons of 500 tons each, which are now in course of construction at Kowloon. As soon as these are completed they will be got into place and a large number of logs laid across from the pontoons on one side to those on the other, to which the vessel will be slung by heavy chains having at one end a large hook for grappling, one at each of the port holes. To the other end of the chains will be attached long screws, which will pass up through the logs of timber and be made fast by a screw nut. By this means an equal strain will be brought on to each of the chains. The pontoons will be immersed as deep as will be consistent with safety. The chains will then be tightened up, the pontoons pumped out, and the vessel floated in shore. When sufficiently far in-shore, a powerful steam pump will be put on board the Caribrooke, which will pump the vessel dry. She will then float by her own buoyancy and be taken into dock for repairs. It is expected that the steamer will be floated in about a month from the present time.

Yesterday morning H. M. despatch-vessel Vigilant went on a trial trip, after undergoing considerable repairs by the staff of the Naval Yard. The engines and boilers have been put into thorough repair, a new main shaft has been put into her, and various other work has been carried out under the superintendence of Mr. H. Williams, R.N., Inspector of Machinery. After this the vessel went into Kowloon dock to be cleaned and painted, and everything having been completed, she ran her trial trip yesterday. Admiral Willes was on board, and at 10.30 o'clock the vessel steamed out through the Lyeemoon Pass, with her engines making 32 revolutions per minute, and at a speed of about 13 knots. This speed was increased another knot on reaching smoother water, though by the orders of the Admiral, she was not driven as most vessels are when upon their trial trips. The vessel behaved as well as could be desired, and everything went well with the engines, excepting a very slight heating of one of the crank head bearing, and a small amount of priming in the boilers. Altogether the results of the trip were considered very satisfactory. The Vigilant was back at her moorings about one o'clock.

Yesterday afternoon a daring robbery was committed by a European at Beaconsfield Lodge. Whilst one of the staff of the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank was at tiffin at the Lodge a well dressed European, who is believed to be an Austrian, went to the premises and passing the watchman at the entrance, (who no doubt thought the intruder went to see the gentleman at tiffin), made his way upstairs to the gentleman's room, and with a chisel forced open four boxes, including a Masonic chest, and extracted therefrom whatever he could lay his hands upon in the way of jewellery, &c. From some reason or other a Chinese boy happened to go upstairs and saw the robber in the act of using his chisel upon which he shook his hand at the boy, who ran downstairs and reported the matter. Whilst the boy was giving the alarm, the robber hastened downstairs, but was met by another gentleman in the passage, who being informed about the affair, seized the intruder and took him down to the Bank. Upon reaching there the man emptied his pocket, confessing that he took the articles, in the hope, perhaps, that he would be let off, but he was given in charge of a Sikh constable while information was being sent to Captain Deane, who despatched a European constable to take the man in custody and convey him to the Central Station. The prisoner had secured at the time some Masonic jewels, and some finger rings, scarf pins, and scarf rings. The chisel is believed to have been purchased yesterday. From the way he went to work, it would seem that he must have had some knowledge of the place. Not much appears to be known of the man, but he was staying for a time at the Star Hotel, after which he went to the Star Hotel, and we believe things were missed from the former house shortly after his leaving it. The prisoner is very respectably dressed, and carries a gold watch and chain.

SUPREME COURT.

6th February.

ORIGINAL JURISDICTION.

BEFORE THE HON. SIR GEORGE PHILLIPPO, CHIEF JUSTICE.

SIEMSSEN & CO. v. LEUNG ATAI.

The Attorney-General (Hon. E. L. O'Malley), instructed by Messrs. Brereton, Wotton, and Deacon, appeared for the plaintiffs. The defendant answered in person and was unrepresented by counsel.

The defendant chartered from the plaintiffs the steamer Triumph at the rate of $11,000 per month, the charterer to pay all charges, and the steamer was hired and employed under this charter from 31st May to 10th October. Certain charges were paid by the plaintiffs with which they alleged the defendant was chargeable, and the total amount claimed by them, deducting payments made by the defendant, was $19,422, together with interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum from the time the same became due.

The defendant objected to certain items in the account amounting altogether to nearly $5,000, and he also said a further deduction ought to be made on account of demurrage, the ship having been detained in consequence of the captain suffering from sore eyes. He suggested a settlement by arbitration, and said Captain Connor, who was in the ship, knew all about the accounts.

The case was then referred by consent to the Registrar to inquire into and report upon the accounts.

POLICE COURT.

BEFORE CAPT. H. G. THOMSETT, R.N.

LARCENY.

Chun Akan, carpenter, was sent to gaol for three months for stealing a vase, value $3, from a general shop in Hollywood-road, on Monday evening. He said a man engaged him to carry it, but the story was not credited.

Wong Ashing, a caulker, thought to provide himself with the means of celebrating Chinese New Year in an expensive manner by annexing two packets of crackers from a shop in Queen's-road. He did not consult the shopkeeper in the matter, however, and the latter was unkind enough to object. He saw what the fellow was after, and chased him along the road, and when he caught him, handed him over to a lokang. The defendant was by no means a stranger to the hospitality of the colony, and he was sent to enjoy his New Year more inexpensively than he had proposed doing, and he went to the Colonial Boarding House, on a pressing invitation for a three months' stay.

Leong Aon had a similar invitation accorded to him as a public recognition of the kind way in which he took care of a bundle of clothing belonging to a trader named Fong Luk Hing, a passenger by the Canton night boat. The owner of the clothes discovered to what an extent he was indebted to the man's kindness just before the steamer got alongside the wharf, and hence his interview with Capt. Thomsett.

NOTES ON THE GEOLOGY OF HONGKONG.

The following article by Mr. F. Warrington Eastlake appears in Nature of December 21st:—

Writing in 1843, Dr. Abel determined the main structure of the island to be of basaltic trap, granite, siliceous and schistose rock. Mr. Kingsmill in 1858, in his excellent papers on the Geology of the Kwangtung Province, was the first to notice the trachytic porphyry of Victoria Peak (1823), the summit of which overlooks the town. This trachytic rock has been apparently forced upwards through the granite after the overflowing and partial hardening of the trap on the west side of the island. It was Mr. Kingsmill also who explained the nature and formation of the pseudo-boulders, with which the island is so plentifully covered. Towards the extreme south-east, near Capo d'Aguilar, these pseudo-boulders assume very large dimensions, and their weather-beaten aspect proves that the chemical action of water and plants, which forced them from the parent rock, occurred a long time ago. Indeed the island must have undergone great changes in course of time; the hill beyond Shekko, for instance, must have been originally nearly or quite as high as Victoria Peak, whereas its present elevation is not more than 500 feet. The rapid action of the heavy rains and rich vegetation is nowhere more apparent than in the high hill (directly back of the peak from which the colony takes its name) known as the Hop's Back, or High West. Its eastern slope is literally covered with pseudo-boulders, rendering the ascent from that side not a little dangerous, and in the rainy season large masses of rock are borne down into the valley beneath.

Now that the population of the island has increased, amateur geologists and mineralogists have become tolerably plentiful, and frequent excursions are made, hammer in hand, to the less known and wider portions of the island. In this manner traces have been found of not a few minerals and several interesting rocks. Silver has been observed in small quantities, also galena, lead, and iron pyrites; slate near Aberdeen, syenite and dolorite on a cliff overlooking that one-time piratical rendezvous, Saiwan, felspar and grey mica abundant.

One of the most interesting finds that of molybdenite, near the village of Sau-ki-wan. Molybdenite, molybdenum glance MoS_2, was not known hitherto to be among the mineral products of China. Germany, Sweden, and Cornwales are the chief localities for this rare mineral, and it has been found in several parts of the United States. The South China specimens show all the well-known characteristics of European molybdenite—colour, lead-grey, streak the same; thin foliated hexagonal plates, closely resembling graphite; flexible, non-elastic lamina, H.=1.2, G. 4, 5. A local chemist corroborated the determination by analysis, and found the composition to be—

Sulphur	= 40.0
Molybdenum	= 60.0
Molybdenum sulphide	= 100.0

It will be seen from this analysis that there is a slight decrease in the quantity of sulphur, compared with European molybdenite. Dana gives the composition of American molybdenum sulphide as follows:—

Sulphur	= 41.0
Molybdenum	= 59.0
	100.0

The mineral was found in small lumps imbedded in the granite.

BANGKOK.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

26th January, 1883.

The death of the Ex-Regent, although looked for, has produced a profound sensation. Identified as he has been for so many years with the political history of Siam, and occupying the chief seat among the statesmen of the kingdom, the withdrawal of this the great and predominant figure in the foreground of the view she presents, both to foreigner and native, leaves not only a marked and noticeable vacancy, but one not likely to be supplied during the present generation. His Highness Somdet Chow Phya Boroma Maha Sri Suriwongse, Prime Minister under the late King, and Regent during the minority of the present, was the first minister of the realm and the chief of its nobility. He was about 75 years old at the time of his death, having been born in 1807 or 1808. It is not always easy to reckon Siamese age in conformity to our system of counting time, what with the lunar months and the shortened year of Siamese reckoning as well as the custom that prevails of calculating age from the birth of a child, considering him one year old when born, i.e., reckoning the age in advance. A Siamese mother when asked the age of a child, three months after its birth, replies "one year and three months," where English figuring would have placed the child as in its first year. The official announcement of the Regent's death fixes his age at 75 years. This would place the date of his birth either in the last of 1807 or the first of 1808. He sprang from one of the wealthiest and most influential families of the State, and at a comparatively early age acquired a considerable influence in its politics—but did not come conspicuously to the front until the year 1851, when H.M. Somdetoh Phra Nang Klao, 3rd of the present dynasty, died. This King, who was only royal on his father's side, had, at the death of that father in 1824, by his great abilities and powers of command, seized the reins of empire to the exclusion of his two legitimate brothers the Princes Mong Koot and Bawaraadr Rameza, both of whom were born in the purple, i.e., royal on both sides of the house. Well and wisely he ruled Siam for 27 years, having ascended the throne in 1824. He was a rigid exclusionist in politics, and though he permitted the presence of foreigners in his kingdom, did so under such restrictions as to prevent any fixed residence being acquired, or any particular advantages gained by such residence. At his death the influence of the late Regent's father, Chow Phya Praklang, and another great nobleman, Chow Phya Sipipat, was potential in placing on the throne the elder Chow Fa, the late King Mongkut, and raising to the post of Wang Nah the younger full brother. In recompense of these services His Majesty promoted the father of the late Regent to the title of Somdetch Ong Yai and the other nobleman in that of Somdetch Ong Noy. The late Regent, who then bore the title of Phraya Sri Suriwongse, having raised himself from Kun Sit and Phra Nai Wai to that position, was created Chow Phya Sri Suriwong Ti Samuha Phra Kalahome, or Minister of War and Marine, with the rank of Prime Minister, a rank he held until the death of King Mongkut. His Majesty the late King placed great confidence in his principal Minister and esteemed him above all the counsellors about the throne. Through his influence, the Treaties of 1855 were made and the kingdom opened to foreign trade and commerce. When the King was aware that his last hours were approaching, he sent for his Minister, and in brief but eloquent terms confided to his hands the future of his young son Chululongkorn (the present King). By the laws of Siam any Prince of the whole blood is eligible to the throne, the choice resting with the Senuabodi, or Great Council of State, H. R. H. Chow Fah Maha Mala, a stately and dignified Prince, then in the very prime of life, and distinguished for his commanding abilities, a full brother of the King, was the most prominent figure in the list of eligible candidates. The Minister accepted the trust, and pledged to the dying King his vow to stand by and support the Crown Prince to the utmost of his means and abilities. This pledge he fulfilled to the very letter, to the hour of his death, his loyalty and devotion to His Majesty only ceasing with his last breath. His influence in the Royal Council was thrown into the scale in favour of the succession of the young Prince, and bore down all opposition. The nomination was unanimous, but as the older ones considered the Prince, as yet, too young to assume the cares and duties of Royalty, it was coupled with the condition that the custody of the realm should remain with the Prime Minister, until the King reached his majority. Well and faithfully that Minister discharged the high duties entrusted to him. Wisely, both by precept and example, he instructed the King in the duties of a ruler and trained his youthful hands to grasp the sceptre as a monarch ever should for the good of his people and the welfare of his realm. Under him Siam advanced slowly but surely, rising steadily in the scale of enlightenment, and where the King has adhered to the policy and been guided by the teachings of his old and faithful servant, the country has still advanced. But of late, I regret to say, somewhat of an estrangement has taken place between the great statesman and the Court. Not that the King has failed in the slightest degree in the honour and respect due to his father's friend, but a crowd of hungry princelings have sprung up about the throne, whose counsels have been pernicious, and whose greediness has nearly emptied the Treasury. (Of course I must not be understood to refer to such distinguished men as Devan, Diss Putarat, Prechit, or the two Chow Fahs.) This influence about the throne vexed and worried the old statesman, and much embittered his last days. He believed the country was entering upon a course of extravagance and folly that would ruin its credit, impoverish its finances, and bring it to ultimate bankruptcy. For many months before his death he retreated to his country residence at Rathburee, and never came to Bangkok except when his health or his duty to the King required it. For some months he had suffered under a bronchial affection, which though relieved could never be entirely cured. Feeling that his last moments were approaching he divided his property among his relatives and friends. To the King he gave his splendid paddle steamer the Apollo. To his only son his palaces and grounds, while his accumulations of money, which were enormous, he distributed among his grandchildren, whose name is "Legion." Restless in spirit, he kept moving about from place to place, preferring to encounter the grim tyrant in transit, rather to await his approach in any fixed place. The advent of the King of Terrors, however, seemed so imminent on the 19th inst. that he left Ceanburee, where he was staying, and dropped down the Meklong to Rathburee, where he desired to be taken upstairs to his favourite apartment that he might die in peace. This was resisted by his attendants, who insisted upon his proceeding to Bangkok, and yielding up his last breath at the capital. The indomitable spirit of the old man at this, probably the first resistance to his will he had ever encountered, asserted itself at the last, and the latest act of his life was to strike the person sharply on the face, who had dared to disobey his commands. He soon after sank into a stupor, and somewhere in the long Canal connecting the Tachin and Maeam Rivers, his spirit passed placidly away. Thus died the greatest man Siam has produced during the present century. His remains were brought to Bangkok, and deposited at his Palace on the Regent's Canal. As soon as the tidings reached the King, who was holding a high religious ceremony in his own family, His Majesty set out at once to visit the remains of his faithful servant, and with his own hands assisted to place him in the funeral urn. By the King's command the urn was surmounted by a royal crown, and all the usual appanages of royalty were affixed. He lies in state now at the rear Sala of his palace, guarded by members of his family and attended by a choir of priests, who, day and night, chant funeral hymns. Here he will remain for one year, when his cremation will take place. For the expenses of this he left with his son one thousand catties ($48,000), but probably a State funeral will be awarded him and the expenses defrayed from the Treasury. He leaves but one son, who holds the position of Prime Minister. One brother is Minister of Foreign Affairs, and another (Phya Bash-Karawongse) late Minister to London. His grandchildren occupy high positions in the State, and one of them is the favourite wife of the King and the mother of the Princess Civili. The representative of a past period in the history of Siam, he has passed away and the place that knew him once knows him now no more.

HIOGO.

It is rumoured that in consequence of the increasing complications between China and Japan a naval station is to be established at Nagoya, in Hizen.

The Korean Envoy purchased a printing plant a short ago, and both pressmen and compositors are now being engaged in Osaka and Nagasaki for service in Korea.

The Chinese of Kobe are buying up spear-heads and sending them to China in large quantities. Consequently these weapons are scarce in Osaka and Kobe, and the price has gone up.

Last year the value of sea-otter skins went up considerably in Kobe, and the demand increased. Skins from Hokkaido are of superior quality, and therefore much sought after in England.

A promising vein of copper has been discovered at Nishi-Hiuramura, Yoshino-gori, Yamato, and an application to work it has been made by Mr. Sefaru, who resides in the same district.

Regarding the approaching visit of His Excellency Inouye to Kobe, we hear that the relations between China and Japan are very accentuated at present. Consequently Mr. Inouye desires to have every facility for communicating with His Excellency Enomoto.

When the Korean disturbance occurred the Commissariat Department had to purchase large quantities of salted daikon at such short notice that great difficulty was experienced in obtaining the requisite supplies. Now salted daikon will keep for four or five years, and therefore stores of the article will in future be provided in every garrison ready for any sudden emergency.

On the 19th ult. a junk called the Jumpu-maru, belonging to Awa, left Hiogo for Osaka laden with rice and other commodities. About 11 o'clock at night a gale came on, and the junk went into Mayenoshima for shelter. A boat pulled off, and the men in it asked for water. This was given them, and having thus disarmed suspicion they boarded the junk and carried off all the money and clothing they could lay hands upon.—News.

OSAKA.

There was a heavy gale experienced in Osaka on the 17th ult. Many roofs of buildings were blown off, and fences levelled. It was thought the vessels lying at Tempozan were in danger, but they sustained no damage.

The Hochi Shimbun makes the announcement that a new shipping company, to be styled the "Osaka Shosen Kwaisha," is to be established in Osaka with a capital of yen 1,500,000 for the purpose of engaging in the carrying traffic to the west of that city. This company is supposed to have some connection with the Kioto Unyu Kwaisha.—Gazette.

TOKIO.

An eruption of Mount Futago, in the province of Sagami, is reported by the Mai Nichi Shimbun to have occurred on the night of the 22nd ult. the mountain vomiting forth stones and ashes, and shaking violently.

The Choya Shimbun announces that it is the intention of some persons in the province of Shimosa to form a company for the more extensive cultivation and better preparation of tea. They also intend to export on their own account.

Wild bear appear to be numerous in the provinces of Yamato and Idzumi, if the Mai Nichi Shimbun has been rightly informed. Last month the number said to have been killed by hunters is computed to be 2,360. These animals come from the hills in droves and have been committing great havoc in the farmers' fields.

According to the Choya Shimbun the government have decided to make a canal between the Takasegawa and lake Biwa and 350,000 yen have been granted for this purpose. It is said that this canal will facilitate the transit of produce as it will connect the river with the lake. Moreover it will supply the city of Kioto with an ample supply of fresh water and also drive a large paper mill which it is contemplated constructing.

Transactions in rice at the Fukagawa godowns, Tokio, on the 24th ult. amounted to 3,330 bags purchased and 2,301 bags sold; and the stock on hand at the close of the day is set down at the 249,615 bags. The price of this commodity is said to be rising, but not so rapidly as to induce many large holders to part with their stock. The cause of the rise in rice is attributed by the Hochi Shimbun to the fact of the government's intention to purchase 100,000 koku, or 300,000 bags; and the reason assigned for the government making this purchase is that the price may keep up and the farmers be able to pay the taxes levied upon them when called upon to do so. Another reason for the increased value of rice is alleged to be the fact of Mr. Fujita, of Osaka, having purchased 30,000 koku. The Hochi Shimbun expresses surprise at this gentleman purchasing such a large quantity, and presumes he is buying on government account.—Japan Gazette.

THE QUANG-SE ROAD MURDER AT SHANGHAI.

On the 27th ult. at seven o'clock p.m. the City Magistrate held a Court to further examine the prisoners charged with complicity in the Quang-se-Road murder. The prisoners were the nurse, the coolie woman, the coolie woman's husband, Shun-fu, and a woman in whose house two trunks which had belonged to the murdered man were stored. The prisoners were first examined separately, as in former examinations, all of them being warned that they would have to confront each other later on, and that therefore they had better speak the truth. In a few cases the magistrate threatened the prisoners with torture, but the required admissions were in every case obtained, and consequently recourse was not had to the rattan. The first to be examined was the coolie woman. She repeated her former statements as to the ill-treatment which the murdered couple bestowed on the servants, and said that formerly they had a cook who was kicked so badly by the master that he vomited blood. The mistress gave him some medicine, and he was cured, but he did not stop in their service more than eight days. The medicine was some which the mistress had concocted for the mandarin, he having had a bad fall a little while before. Shun-fu and herself and the nurse were all beaten by the master, and they consequently planned to murder him. On the night of the 16th the master and mistress and nurse were in the room eating their supper. The assistant cook went out to buy something, and when he returned he brought two men with him. Soon afterwards the mistress went to bed, and Shun-fu came to the door and asked whether she was asleep. She (the coolie woman) said, "Yes," and they then went in and murdered the master and mistress; there being among the party four strangers—men who did not belong to the house. They then went upstairs, opened an iron safe, and divided the booty. In answer to a question as to whether her husband was implicated, she said he was not; he only came to the house on the 14th for the purpose of getting some wages from her. The magistrate asked why she wrote requesting her husband to come to Shanghai; and she said she did not do so. If he had been asked to come to commit such a crime he would not have brought his two sons with him. With respect to the gold bars found by the murderers, she said that her master had altogether thirty gold bars, deposited with the comprador of Messrs. Chapman, King and Co. He sent for ten of them, because he wanted to buy a concubine, and two of them were exchanged for 400 dollars, which he gave to the parents of the concubine. The girl, however, found both the master and mistress so ill-tempered and fond of beating people that she got her parents to return the money, and went back to them. The master got into such a passion about this that his heart became affected. In the course of further examination the prisoner stoutly denied that she was present at either the murder or the sharing of the booty, and said she received only a bracelet and some clothes which were nothing more than cloth and cotton. The magistrate reminded her that the clothes found in her possession were silken, and threatened to punish her. She said after the murder she went alone to Foochow by the mail boat.

The woman with whom the trunks were left was then examined. She said the trunks were left with her by the nurse, who was accompanied by a man; but as his back was turned to her she would not be able to recognise him again. They were taken away by the nurse's husband.

The nurse was next brought forth. She said on the 4th day of the 11th moon they planned the affair. At that time they intended to use lime to destroy the master's eyesight, and then, when he could not see who did it, to plunder the house. On the night of the murder the coolie woman opened the door, and the men came in with a rush. The assistant cook held the master's head, a short man got on top of him, and Shun-fu killed him. The Tientsin man strangled the mistress with a rope, and, finding that she did not die immediately, took a knife and stabbed her twice. What became of the master's head was known only to Shun-fu. The magistrate asked her whether Shun-fu's uncle was also implicated. She said on the evening of the murder she was looking for the young master's hat, and Shun-fu said his uncle had taken it away, and so she thought Shun-fu's uncle was implicated. It was quite true that after the murder she bought some joss sticks, and they all swore an oath of eternal secrecy. She was then asked where her husband had gone to, and she replied that he had gone to a certain mandarin's house, away from Shanghai. After the murder they cooked some rice, warmed some wine, and ate some ham, and by that time it was light, and they began to take the things away. The magistrate said, "Shun-fu says that you wanted to sell the young master to a man in the iron trade. Is that so?" The prisoner replied that she intended to leave the child with the compradore of Messrs. Chapman, King and Co. Her husband, she said, did not set the house on fire. Hu, the assistant cook, said they ought not to leave any trace of their crime, so she gave Shun-fu a dollar to buy kerosene. She thought that people would take it for granted that the fire was occasioned by her mistress's opium l

EXTRACTS.

DESECRATION.

The poet died last night;
Outworn his mortal frame;
He hath fought well the fight
And won a deathless name.

Bring laurel for his bier
And flowers to deck the hearse;
The tribute of a tear
To his immortal verse.

Hushed in that piercing strain
Who heard, for pleasure wept,
His were our joy and pain;
He sang—our sorrow slept.

Yes—weep for him; no more
Shall such high songs have birth;
Gone is the harp he bore
Forever from the earth.

Weep, weep, and scatter flowers
Above his precious dust;
Child of the heavenly powers—
Divine, and pure, and just.

Ah, weep—for when to-night
Shall hoot the horned owl—
Beneath the pale moon's light
The human ghouls prowl.

What creatures those shall throng
Within the sacred gloom,
To do our poet wrong—
To break the sealed tomb?

His trusted friend and near,
Toward whom his spirit moved;
The brother he held dear;
The woman that he loved?

THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH AND HIS VIOLINS.

A correspondent has forwarded one or two interesting facts with reference to the violins used by the Duke of Edinburgh. One of these violins is a splendid instrument given to his Royal Highness by the Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, who inherited it from the father of Prince Albert. The other, which also possesses some very fine qualities, was presented to the Duke of Edinburgh by the late Emperor of Russia. The Prince makes these two instruments his invariable companions in all his travels. They have been all round the world with him, and it may be added that they are carried in a rosewood box, covered by a quilted piece of blue satin, the work of the Duchess of Edinburgh.

THE SECRET OF MAKING MUMMIES.

Two Pennsylvanians claim that they have discovered the secret of making mummies. They have applied at the Patent Office at Washington for a patent for their process of preserving the dead supposed to be the long-lost Egyptian art. It is alleged that, partly by accident and finally by experiment, they have discovered a certain combination of antiseptic elements which, if diffused through a dead body, even when it is in an advanced stage of decomposition, will destroy all corruptible matter and convert the flesh into a cartilaginous state—the denser parts being converted into a hard horny substance, but natural in its appearance. In one of these experiments the inventors applied the compound to the remains of a dead infant. Ten weeks after the body had been removed from all contact with the compound the flesh had become like rubber, the cheeks were full, and pliant to the touch; and the ears had become like polished bones.

A FAMILY OF GIANTS.

The great attraction in the ladies' waiting-room at the Union depot last evening was three giant brothers, each over seven feet in height, with three small wives. An investigation established the fact that the men had been East perfecting arrangements with a circus manager to place themselves on exhibition during the coming spring; that they were returning from their trips highly elated over their success and that they resided in Hunt country, Tex., where they owned farms, which up to the present winter, they had cultivated in obscurity. The most remarkable circumstance connected with their history is that they had four other brothers residing on farms in Hunt county, who were also each over seven feet in height. This family of giants, the sons of William Shields, who emigrated to Texas from Georgia twenty-six years ago, are probably the most remarkable family, physically speaking, in the United States, although they lived comparatively unknown to the world outside of Hunt county, Texas, until discovered during the present year by a travelling circus manager. Two of the number, James and Jack Shields, are exactly seven feet eleven inches in height, their weights being respectively 306 and 376 pounds. They are twins and are one inch taller than Gus Shields, one of their brothers. One of the seven brothers is only 18 years of age, yet he measures from the soles of his feet to the crown of his head seven feet and four inches. This young man is still growing. Their father lacked an inch of being seven feet tall, but their mother was a woman of average size. The combined weights of four of the brothers is 1019 pounds.—St. Louis Republican, December 1st.

STREET PICTURES FROM A CENTRAL ASIAN CITY.

Mr. E. O'Donovan, the enterprising correspondent of the Daily News, has published an account of his Central Asian experiences under the title of "The Merv Oasis: Travels and Adventures East of the Caspian." The author's graphic style is well exemplified in the following description of picturesque Oriental figures to be met with on the streets of Meshed, a sacred Mohammedan city near the north-eastern Persian frontier. The tall slight man (says Mr. O'Donovan) with delicately cut features, large dark eyes, and stately pace, is an Arab merchant from Bagdad. These two odd-looking little old men with mouse-coloured faces and red marks between the eyes, clad in dark monkish-looking gowns and sandals, are traders from Bombay, and for the moment the guests of Abass Khan, the native British agent here. They halt and salute me elaborately as I pass. Half a dozen Merv Turcomans, with calm, resolute air, and keeping well together, come next with their usual sauntering step and upright carriage. They look as if they were, taking stock and meditating how best to effect a wholesale sweep of the goods displayed around them. A little further on we meet some jaunty-looking handsome young men in dark tunics and sombre-tinted turbans, one end of the cloth stuck up cockade-wise in front, the other hanging upon the neck. One of them carries a small circular shield of iron, embossed, inlaid, engraved, and ornamented as the shield of Achilles. Held by the scabbard and thrown carelessly over his shoulder is an exceedingly curved Indian-looking sword with wonderfully small boulbous iron handle. He is an Afghan chief accompanied by his friends. I am not acquainted with them, but they bow and smile pleasantly as they recognise my nationality. I remarked the same thing of all the Afghans here, and the town was full of them, both traders and refugees. They all invariably smiled and saluted me. At Kuchan it was the same thing. I have met many of them from Cabul, Candahar, Jelalabad, and Herat; some of them had taken an active part in the late war, but none seemed to bear the slightest ill-will towards England on that account.

THE HAMLET SAGA.

In the reign of King Rörick, Gorvendel was governor and commander in Jutland. At his death the king appointed his two sons, Hardvendel and Fenge, in their father's place to defend and govern Jutland in common. Hardvendel took to the sea and made a great name for himself as a Viking. When he had spent three years in this manner, it happened that King Koller of Norway went in search of him to try his luck, whether he would be able to overcome so mighty and renowned a lord. Having searched for him a long time, they happened both to run up with their ships under an island in the high seas. They met unawares in the wood. Hardvendel addressed the king and said: "As you have challenged me, and we shall have to fight it out before we separate from this island, it would seem to me most advisable, if so it pleases you, that we take up the combat alone between ourselves, to show what we are able to do, each without the help of anyone else." King Koller was struck with the young man's clever and manly words, and replied: "As you leave it to me to choose between a standing battle or a single combat, I shall prefer what you propose. They at once began the combat without waiting, though they met for the first time. Hardvendel forgot in his eagerness to hold his shield before him. He seized his sword in both hands and struck repeatedly so hard on Koller's shield, that it fell from him in splinters. With the same stroke he cut off one of his legs. As this wound proved fatal, he was interred, as agreed upon, with great ceremony. After this, Hardvendel pursued and killed Sela, Koller's sister, also a very able Viking and warrior. Having spent three years on the seas, Hardvendel returned home and made himself so agreeable to King Rörick, by presenting him with the best part of his booty, that he obtained the hand of Geruthe, the king's daughter. By her he had a son, called Amleth. His brother Fenge became envious of his good fortune, and watched for an opportunity to take his life. Not content with having killed his own brother, Fenge took to himself his wife Geruthe. Fenge was not only a tyrant, but cunning and false, and endeavoured to hide his wickedness behind the mantle of piety and virtue. He pleaded that he had killed his brother to protect the pious and noble lady Geruthe against her hard and impious husband, at whose hands she had suffered much ill-treatment without any fault of hers. These lies succeeded, and would do so even nowadays with many princes and lords, who honour at their courts calumniators and flatterers. When Amleth, Hardvendel's son, became aware of this, he feared for his own life, and, to save it, he pretended to be out of his mind. He rolled himself in the mud and smeared his face and his body therewith. Sometimes he sat in the ashes at the fireplace and brushed the coals to and fro. Sometimes he bent pieces of wood, made them hot in the fire, and shaped them into hooks. When asked what he meant them for, he answered: "I make spears to avenge my father's death." Some thought his answer silly; but such pieces of work, which he preserved carefully, helped him later on, as will be seen, to fulfil his purpose. Others, who thought more of his doings, suspected that he was not so mad as he appeared, but that he concealed his wisdom behind silly and treacherous pretence. In consequence they formed a scheme to test him in secrecy with a beautiful woman, in order to discover whether he would allow himself to fall in love with her. A large forest was chosen for the purpose. Amongst those who accompanied him on his way thither was one who had been brought up with him. He thought of their old associations, and gave Amleth a secret hint to be on his guard, as he knew it would cost him his life if he gave the slightest indication of a sane mind, especially if he touched the woman who was to meet him in the forest. Amleth thought as much himself, and as they brought him a horse, he mounted it the wrong way, turning his back to the horse's neck and his face to its tail, to which he fixed the harness, as if he did not know any better. As they proceeded through the wood, they met a wolf. Amleth asked what it was. They said: "It is a filly." He replied: "Fenge has too few such fillies in his stables." In jesting thus, he insinuated that wolves and wild beasts might take his stepfather's life and revenge his father's death. He always contrived to put his words in such a manner that he could not be caught in what he said, though he never told a direct falsehood. When passing along the seashore, his followers pointed to the white sand and asked him what he thought of such beautiful fine flour. He replied: "It has been ground by windmills from the white froth of the wavy sea." Having proceeded far into the forest, they left him, that he might feel himself without restraint towards the young lady, whom they had arranged to meet him unawares. But his former playfellow gave him a warning. He caught a wasp, stuck it upon a straw, and let it fly towards Amleth. When he saw this, he knew at once that a snare had been laid for him. He went further on, into a thicket with the young lady where no one could see them. She had been brought up from childhood with Amleth, and he besought her, on account of their friendship, to return his love, but not to betray him, and she did so. On his return home, he was questioned, in jest, whether he had won the heart of the young lady. He answered: "Yes!" and, on their questioning him further, he said: "We sat on a couch made of the roof of a house, a horseshoe, and the comb of a cock." They all laughed at his answer, but he had taken parts of all these articles with him when he was brought to the forest, that he might always be able to speak the truth. They also questioned the young lady; but she denied his assertions, and everybody believed her, as no one had seen what had taken place. His friend also came forward, and told him how he had warned him by the singal he had sent him. Amleth answered that in fact he had seen something flying before him with a straw in its tail. The others laughed at this, but his comrade was pleased to hear his cautious answer. As they had failed in ensnaring Amleth that time, one of Fenge's friends advised him to try in another way to discover Amleth's dissimulation. Fenge was to pretend to be obliged to leave home on important business, and mean while lock Amleth up alone with his mother. The counsellor offered to hide himself in the place to listen to their secret conversation, convinced that, if Amleth was in the least sane, he would not conceal his plans from his mother. But Amleth was on his guard. He began as usual to run about the house, threw out his arms as if they had been wings, and crowed like a cock. Finding a heap of straw, in which the spy was hidden, he jumped about upon it, till he felt something beneath his feet. He then got hold of a sword and thrust it through the concealed man. He afterwards dragged him out, killed him, and cut his body into small pieces. He boiled the parts in water and threw them into the pigsty to be devoured by the pigs. After having done this, he turned to his mother, who shed tears over his madness, and said to her: "You wicked woman, who take into your arms the one who murdered your dear husband, and who love the man who made your son fatherless! The brute animals only live in such a manner together. You have shown that such is your nature, having forgotten so soon your first husband. It is not without reason that I pretend to be mad, because the man who did not spare his own brother will not have pity on others of his blood and kin. It is indeed not insanity to defend one's own life by feigning madness. My father's death weighs on my heart day and night. Might I only find the opportunity to avenge him! But such designs cannot be executed at once. It requires great cunning to overcome so hard and cruel a tyrant. Do not bemoan my madness, but your own shame and dishonour." With these hard words, he turned his mother's heart from sin to virtue from her unnatural love to Fenge towards her former faith to his own father. When Fenge returned home and asked about his spy, whom he had set to watch Amleth, he was to be found nowhere. Amleth was asked in joke about him, and said that he had seen him fall into the pigsty where he had been devoured by the hogs. Though his answer was true, it was received with derision. Fenge would have murdered Amleth, but he feared his grandfather, King Rörick, and his mother's anger. He therefore sent him with letters to the King of England, not caring if he threw disgrace on his good friend, in order to escape suspicion himself. When Amleth was ready to start, he recommended his mother, when a year and a day had elapsed, to say that she had tidings of his death. She was then to have the hall hung with cloth sewn together, as if for his funeral. Amleth promised that the same day and hour he would return to her. He then took his departure with two of his stepfather's men, who had letters engraved on staves as was usual in those days, in which the King of England was requested to take Amleth's life. One night on the passage, while his companions were asleep, Amleth found the letters about them, and having read the message, he effaced the words and altered their meaning so as to tell the king not only to hang his two companions, but also to wed Amleth himself to his daughter. On their arrival, the men delivered the letters, not knowing that they betrayed themselves. The king, concealing his intentions, received them all in a friendly manner. But Amleth would not eat nor drink of what was offered him. They all wondered much that the foreigner should despise the costly royal dishes, as if they were food for servants. The king secretly ordered one of his men to hide at night in Amleth's chamber, and listen to his talk with his comrades. These asked him why he had not partaken of the food and drink, as if they had contained poison. Amleth answered them, saying: "The bread tasted of blood, the beer of iron, and the meat of dead men's corpses." When these words were related to the king the next day, he said: "Either this man is very clever, or he is more insane than anyone else." He sent for his steward and asked whether a battle had been fought on the fields where the corn for the bread was grown. The steward answered that the corn was grown in a field, on account of its fertility, in which dead men's bones were still to be found; a battle had been fought there in former days. When the king heard this, he perceived truth in Amleth's words, and asked: "Whence came the pork?" The steward confessed that the pigs had escaped and had eaten of the corpse of a dead robber. The beer was then examined, and in digging by the well, whence the water had been taken, a great number of rusty swords were found at the bottom of it. The king praised Amleth's cleverness, and gave him his daughter in marriage. The day after the wedding, he had his two comrades hanged, according to the wish expressed in Fenge's letters. But Amleth feigned to be offended, and the king, to conciliate him, gave him a large sum of gold. This he melted into two hollow staves, which afterwards he brought back with him to Denmark. After having spent about a year in England, Amleth asked leave to go home, and carried nothing with him but the aforesaid two staves. On arriving in Jutland, he took off his smart clothes and covered himself with rags. He reached his father's house, where he found everybody in great glee. He entered the hall where they held his funeral. They wondered at his return, and reproached one another for mourning the one who stood alive amongst them. When they asked him what had become of his comrades, he drew forth the two sticks and said: "See! here they are both." Amleth then busied himself with pouring out drink for the guests, so as to make them the more merry and drunk. But to be able to walk about with more ease, he tucked up his garment with his belt. The guests could not endure to see him now and then draw his sword and try the edge on his nails. They therefore hammered a nail right through the scabbard and the blade. He went pouring out drink till they all became very drunk, lying down to sleep where they sat. When he had so far succeeded, he left all the cloth, with which the walls were hung, fall down, covering them entirely therewith, and fastening it together with the hooks he had made in former days, so that not one of the drunken guests could move or make his escape. He then set fire to the house above them, till it was all in flames. Then he hastened to the dormitory, to which Fenge had been carried by his servants, took his sword from beside the couch and hung his own in its place. He then woke him saying: "Fenge, thy good men are burning into ashes, and here is Amleth with his hooks to avenge his father's death." Fenge jumped to his legs, and while he tried to draw the sword at his bedside, Amleth killed him.—Nineteenth Century.

CENTENARISM.

The long-vexed question of the extreme limit of human life, as proved by authentic records, gives an interest to the view taken of the subject, not by mere curious speculators, but by grave actuaries. Dr. Farr, in his tables of the expectation of human life at various ages, not only accepts 100 as a recorded age, but estimates the average duration of life beyond that limit, as in the case of females about one year, nine months, and three and a half days; and, in the case of males, at about one month less than that time. No account, however, is given of the extent of the data on which these nice calculations are based; nor does this eminent authority on vital statistics attempt to carry his investigation beyond the case of centenarians.

AN UNREHEARSED SCENE IN A THEATRE.

One of the travelling "Uncle Tom's Cabin" companies in the United States possesses among the properties a real live bloodhound, which has been trained to chase the fugitive slave with an appearance of great ferocity. Some nights ago the play was given in Staten Island. Just as the immense beast was about to spring toward the fleeing slave, he caught sight of a bulldog behind the scenes, belonging to Chief Engineer Henry Shafer, of the fire department. The bulldog instantly assumed the offensive, and leaping upon the stage with mad yelps, he seized the bloodhound's ear, whilst the slave girl made haste to gain a place of safety, and the audience moved about uneasily. In a moment all was confusion. Over and over the animals rolled, quickly surrounded by a ring of local politicians, more anxious to see "fair play" than to part the beasts. Suddenly the hound's ear gave way, and the bulldog was at a disadvantage. Two savage crunches were heard, and the smaller animal almost disappeared within the jaws of its huge antagonist. The look of deep concern which overspread the latter's countenance, however, and a smothered series of yelps, indicated that hostilities had not yet ceased, and in a few moments the dramatic company had lost one of its most important members.
